

For years it has been accepted legal fact that the airwaves belong to the people and not to the special commercial interests. Diversity of sources of information and opinion, especially in the mass media, is imperative in a democracy. Even large corporations cannot own the media, they can only own a license which is and should be regulated in the public interest. The public interest is a key element in the communications act. I urge you to leave the current rules in place. Your proposed changes feed into the hands of the giant media corporations who can gain greater and greater control over what we see and hear. Leave things as they are!
